

Jerusalem Dep. Mayor: Special plan to reopen pilgrimage sites once 'green light' is provided

Jerusalem Deputy Mayor Fleur Hassan-Nahoum told the Jerusalem Post over the weekend that although no decision has been taken, as yet, on when holy pilgrimage sites will open in the ancient city, the goal of municipal authorities is develop a special plan once the “green light” is provided.

She said, “...We need a thoughtful plan specifically for the Holy Basin: the Temple Mount, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and the Western Wall, including the surrounding areas. We will need to limit the number of people, test their temperature and ensure that masks and hand sanitizers are used.”
