

Orthodox Church in Montenegro: More threats, blackmail by state against Church

The Orthodox Church in Montenegro this week referred to what it called new threats and blackmail by the government in the small Adriatic country, all in the wake of a latest meeting between Church representatives and government officials.

The meeting aimed to resolve a contentious dispute emanating from the government's passing of a controversial law on religious institutions, which the Orthodox Church in Montenegro, the Metropolitanate of Montenegro and the Littoral, says is a veiled attempt to confiscate its properties and relics.