Stricter measures re-instituted in greater Athens area after surge in coronavirus infections

Greek authorities have accepted public health officials' recommendations and ordered stricter measures to in the greater Athens area to prevent exposure to the coronavirus outbreak.

The development comes after a surge in the number of confirmed Covid-19 cases and a spike in the number of people being treated in intensive care units.

In terms of measures that affect the Church in the greater Athens area, a ceiling of 20 people has been mandated for weddings, baptisms and funerals, along with affiliated events and receptions.
