For the second time in a month, Yelena Popovic's film Man of God about the great 20th-century wonderworker St. Nektarios of Aegina has received coveted audience accolades at international film festivals.

The film made its international premier at the 43rd Moscow International Film Festival in late April, taking home the Audience Award.

It was then part of the Los Angeles Greek Film Festival, held from May 10 to 30, where it again proved quite popular. According to the film's official Facebook page, Man of God again took home the Audience Award.

It is also nominated for Best Film in the Phoenix Film Festival in August, and it is set to hit theaters in Greece and Cyprus on August 26.
