Archbishop Ieronymos: Church and field of science should cooperate

The Archbishop of Athens and All Greece, His Beatitude Ieronymos, speaking at an event in his honor, organized on Monday evening by the Municipality of Lividia, in south-central Greece, referred to a need for the Church and the field of science to cooperate.

He stated, characteristically, “…those who struggle against the Church and science are on a wrong path; religion and science have their own space, and have the ability to cooperate; in fact, they are obliged to have such cooperation.”
