Greek govt hints at prospect of obligatory vaccination of educators, clerics

The Greek government on Tuesday left open the possibility of expanding the obligatory Covid-19 vaccination framework to educators and clerics in the country.

This prospect, in fact, may come up for discussion during the upcoming session of the permanent Holy Synod of the Autocephalous Orthodox Church of Greece, which is scheduled to convene with its new composition of hierarchs on Thursday and Friday, and under the chairmanship of the Archbishop of Athens and All Greece, His Beatitude Ieronymos.
