Russian-language version of 'Man of God' debuts in Moscow this month

The award-winning film "Man of God", based on the life and works of St. Nektarios of Aegina, will debut in Russia on Oct. 10, and with a Russian language voiceover.

The international production, written and directed by Yelena Popovic, will premiere in the country at the Karo Oktyabr movie theater in Moscow, before opening in 27 cities across the vast country.

The voice of actor Dmitry Pevtsov will be dubbed over Aris Servetalis, who portrays St. Nektarios in the film, while Alexander Petrov will dub, in Russian, his own role, as Kostas, in the movie.

The international production has set box office ticket sales records in Greece and Cyprus, where it premiered on Aug. 26.
