Terror against remaining Serbian community in Kosovo & Metohija continues

Persecution and terror against the remaining Serbian population in Kosovo and Metohija has continued uninterrupted for 18 years after a dastardly pogrom on March 17, 2004.

The latest instance of intimidation by Kosovo Albanian authorities came on Wednesday, with armed police invaded several homes of ethnic Serbs on the pretext of fighting against corruption, as they claimed.

Over the past two decades numerous attacks by Kosovo Albanians against the Orthodox Serbian population have been recorded, along with vandalism and the attempted destruction of Christian Orthodox and ethnic Serbian monuments and places of worship in the province.
