

Five years since mass abduction of school girls in Nigeria by Islamist terrorists

Five years have passed since the abduction of 230 school girls from a village in northeast Nigeria by the terrorist group Boko Haram.

Most of the abducted school girls are Christian.

In an extensive report, the group opendoorsusa talked with villagers, who expressed their hope and cited their prayers for a return of the kidnapped girls.

Numerous secondary schools in the African country's north have closed due to fears of attacks by the Islamist group.
