

Patriarch Kirill's message for V-Day in Russia

The Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia, His Holiness Kirill, on Wednesday, the eve of Victory Day, called on the Russians to be so strong, as he said, that the enemies will not even think about starting a war.

“We must be strong so that no enemy enters our land ever again. We must be so strong that even a thought to start a war against our country could seriously exist in the minds of the people,” he said, addressing servicemen after laying wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in the Russian capital.
