Archdiocesan Greek Language Programs Receive Teq Equipment to Support Student Learning

Nearly 100 parishes now have access to high-tech learning tools for their students. The Department of Greek Education, with the generosity of the Stavros Niarchos Foundation, for a second year, was able to purchase Interactive Panels, SMART TVs, and Chromebooks for parishes that teach the Greek language.

Additional funding was also made available for the purchase of award-winning software Ellinopoula an online Greek language program geared towards helping students learn the Greek language.

Up to date, over $300,000 in technology devices and software have been distributed to parishes that have Greek language programs. “Thanks to the immense support from the Stavros Niarchos Foundation, we can provide programs with access to technology which will positively impact their students for many years to come,” said the Director Mr. Anastasios Koularmanis.

This initiative could not have been possible without the support and guidance of His Eminence Archbishop Elpidophoros. The Archbishop’s commitment to the Greek language is evident through this and other initiatives of the Department of Greek Education.

The Department of Greek Education recognizes the unprecedented challenges faced by our schools and programs, and they remain committed to supporting each and every parish of the Archdiocese.
